"Books and libraries and the will to use them are among the most important tools our nation has to diffuse knowledge and to develop our power of creative wisdom. It is, however, a fact that there is an important gap in the availability of books and libraries to our citizens. . . . There is a great imbalance of resources among the great educational institutions of our country. A majority of elementary schools have no libraries at all. . . . The community public library is one of the richest and more enduring assets of our historical heritage."

These statements are excerpts from the 1961 National Library Week message of President John F. Kennedy, a stubborn pursuer of reading matter of all kinds, whose voracious and omnivorous reading habits have caused a revolution in the reading habits of his staff members and of top-ranking government officials. Editors, writers, reporters, publishers and, of course, librarians are all immensely pleased that JFK believes so strongly in the power of the printed word. He himself has said, "I get most of my ideas from reading."

Governor John A. Volpe, in a letter to the Bay State Librarian following his election in November, 1960, said, "Naturally I wish to co-operate with all groups in the state which are doing effective work, and most particularly so with those in your profession, since I have so often stressed that what we need in government is more attention to brains and skill, which librarians so prominently possess. Certainly, we are in full agreement that all citizens of the Commonwealth should be provided with full access to useful and educational books."

In November, 1960, Governor Foster Furcolo signed into law provisions for state aid for free public libraries, thus giving this Commonwealth a legal instrument—Chapter 760 of the Acts of 1960—by which local public libraries can move toward achievement of state and national standards for public library service; by which increased local support for public libraries can be stimulated; by which the basic inequalities in public library service as offered in urban and rural areas can be reduced; by which large libraries can be reimbursed for special and valuable services provided other communities in the surrounding areas; and last but not least by which a comprehensive state-wide program of regional public library service will be established.

The 1961 fiscal year has been both a very exciting and an exceedingly difficult one for the Division. State aid to libraries has dominated the scene. All staff members have had to take on additional duties to meet this new challenge, and all have applied perseverance, vision, and high spirits to the task. The first state grants to cities and towns for free public libraries were paid out in 1961 as a charge against the state income tax revenue. The Board of Library Commissioners certified 237 of 351 municipalities for grants totalling $974,442.65.

Considerable progress was also made toward the establishment of a comprehensive statewide program of regional public library systems. Plans submitted from four of the five regional areas delineated by the Board are now being carefully discussed and evaluated and will soon be off the launching pad.

The state library extension agency is now on the threshold of an era which will see new concepts of public library service develop in Massachusetts as old obstacles to coordination and cooperation are dissolved. The "new look" in public library service will bring with it increased responsibilities for the Division, especially in the areas of general administration, supervision, publicity and public relations. Some of the present operational functions will gradually be decentralized and performed at the regional level. The advisory and consultative services will take on greatly increased importance, as will our stake in the promotion of in-service training opportunities for the professional growth of practising librarians.

We truly are facing changing times in librarianship and library service! With a President and a Governor who believe in the importance of books and reading in a changing world, with the provision of both state and federal aid to libraries, with a sincere belief in the results which can be accomplished through cooperative efforts, and with a hard-working, well-trained and experienced staff, we look forward to moving Massachusetts libraries ahead farther and faster in the coming year than ever before.
